MARY GORDON "The flowers of tomorrow lie in the seeds of today"

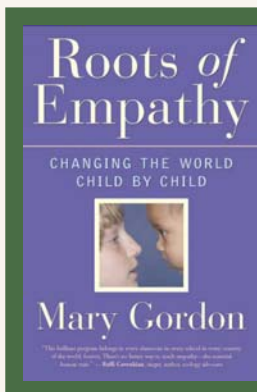

The impact of early childhood travels through our lives like a golden thread; sometimes unravelling our future and sometimes sewing it together. The start that children get in life has a great deal to do with everything else that happens to them. It is through relationships that young children learn. Parents, caregivers, and teachers hold the platform of power because when you work with or raise children, you touch the future. As a society, we must clear a path for children's dreams and link arms to ensure that the early experiences for all children are nothing less than we would wish for our own.
